Course Title: Language of the text

Course Credits: 4 ECTS

Language of Instruction: Albanian

Course Description:

The "text" is the object of study of this discipline. The lectures begin with a historical description of the birth and development path of this discipline, so interesting and indispensable in university curricula. In the chapter of textual typology, where we distinguish: narrative, descriptive, informative, argumentative, regulatory, poetic, dialogic type, of course, the narrative text will be given a wider place, due to the density of its use and construction, which is completely separate from the types other text writers, focusing on: its decomposition into sequences, narrative time (as the time of the story and the time of the story), the narrator's relationship with the reader, the characters of the event, the treatment of the concepts "open text", "closed text" etc. So, in this discipline, through textual models, the variety and multitude of texts used, reflecting the expressive means of Albanian, become known.

Course Goals:

The main goal in this discipline is to acquaint students with: the limits of the language text; textual and non-textual structure; basic notions of creating a text; the different interpretations it receives in different communicative contexts and situations; criteria of textuality, such as: cohesion, coherence, purpose, acceptability, information, situation and intertextuality; criteria for classifying texts, leading to textual typology.
